Washington, May 16.—The life of John Foster Dulles was reported ebbing Saturday.

Members of his family are here. In addition to his wife and brother, Allen, who heads the central intelligence agency, they include his three children and three sisters.

The state department said there has been no improvement in his condition since Friday when it reported "some further decline."

At the same time it announced, in conjunction with Princeton university, that a John Foster Dulles library of diplomatic history will be established at the school.

Gift of Papers Told

The library will include the personal papers of the cancer stricken former secretary of state covering his long career in diplomatic and international affairs. Princeton President Robert P. Coates disclosed material pertaining to the Hague peace conference of 1907, the World War I peace treaties, the creation of the United Nations, and the meetings of the council of foreign ministers in London, Paris, and Moscow in six years Dulles served as the year's immediate foreign policy chief until last April 15, when President Dulles' actual time as head ended, with great reluctance of the state department.

In addition the library will house a collection of copies of official documents of the state department during the don six years Dulles served as the year's immediate foreign policy chief until last April 15, when President Dulles' actual time as head ended, with great reluctance of the state department.

Using his 71, he is now confined to bed in his suite at Walter Reed army hospital here. The pneumonia which has further complicated his condition since he was stricken with it some eight days ago, has not cleared.

According to the Princeton graduate of Princeton

Dulles received his bachelor's degree from Princeton in 1917. He was a member of the class of 1917.

He is a graduate of the University of Chicago, where he received a
